*This is where the magic happens... Best case is they can type directly into the text area and make changes to their custom stamp and have it update as they type or change an attribute-- otherwise I can live with a preview that updates so they can see their changes.

"Choose type" is a menu that shows the typestyle, not just name. "Type size" would have a list of sizes from 8pt to 72pt. "Position" is centered, left justified, or right justified. "Type style" is bold, italic, underline (default to plain)

This email is used by the manufacturer to produce the stamp and mail it
The top becomes the mailing label-- needs to fit on a 8.5x11" page the lower section is used by the art dept to produce stamps--

They would use the image preview to paste into a page layout program:
preview of stamp can be .tif, .png, or .pdf (should be 300 dpi with no grayscale, or if pdf as a vector)

After the stamp is manufactured, the printout is used to marry the stamp to the shipping package.

Barcode is the order #, which can be the index number for the order.

If there are more than one stamp per shipping address, the additional stamps can be added to the same email (if that's possible).

(Orinally we had two stamp imprints, but manufacturer doesn't need it.)
